

Once upon a time, in the sunny city of Miletus
(where people wore togas and argued about olives),
there lived a little boy named Anaximander.

Once upon a time, in the sunny city of Miletus
(where people wore togas and argued about olives),
there lived a little boy named Anaximander.

While other kids played hide-and-seek, he was busy staring at the sky, poking jellyfish, and asking:

- "Why doesn't the Earth fall down?"
- "Did we come from fish?"
- "What if the world is just floating... in NOTHING?"

Justin Lee

While other kids played hide-and-seek, he was busy staring at the sky, poking jellyfish, and asking:

- "Why doesn't the Earth fall down?"
- "Did we come from fish?"
- "What if the world is just floating... in NOTHING?"

